How much does a xenon headlight fill light module cost

Overview

Find the perfect headlight ballast replacement for your vehicle. Discover options compatible with a wide range of makes and models.

Key Takeaways

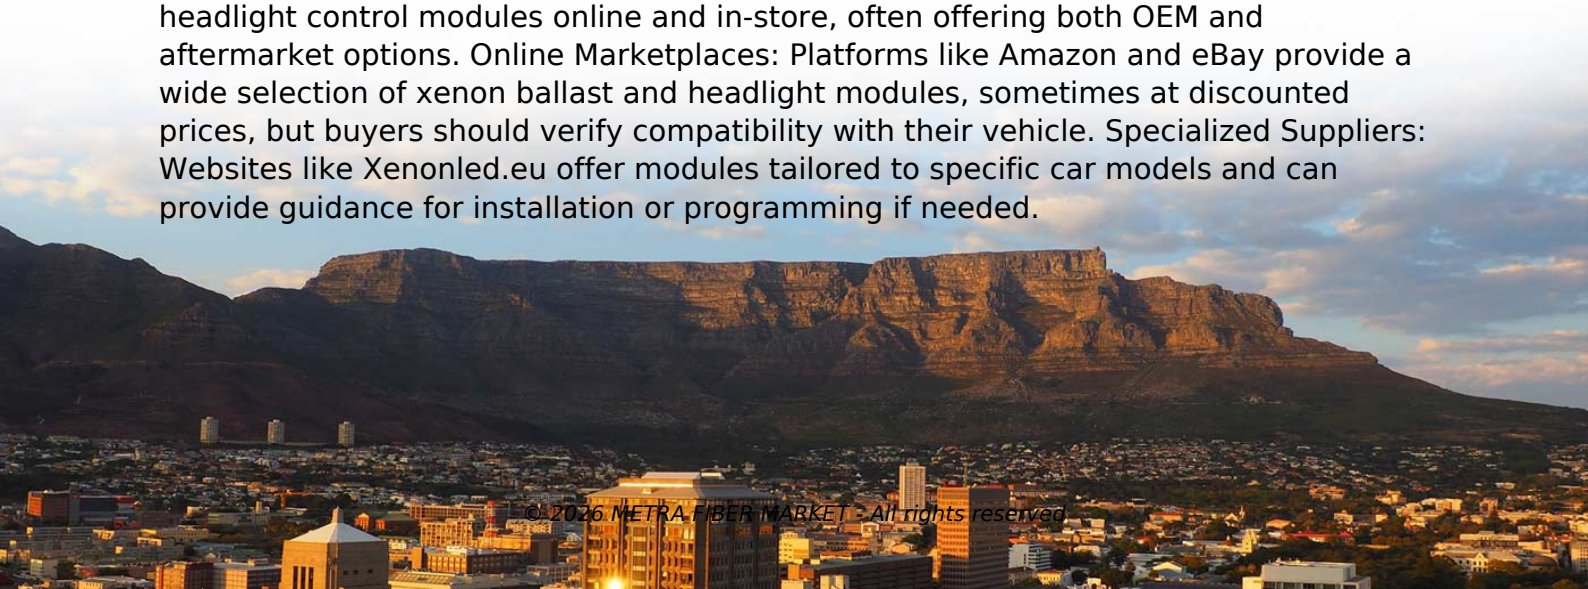

Xenon headlight fill light modules typically cost between $200 and $400, depending on the brand, vehicle model, and whether the module is OEM or aftermarket.

Cost Overview

The average price for a headlight control module, which includes xenon fill light modules, is around $300. Prices can vary based on the vehicle fitment, brand, and availability in your area, with some modules costing slightly less or more than this average (Advance Auto Parts). Aftermarket options may be available at lower prices, while OEM modules tend to be at the higher end of the range.

Purchasing Options

Auto Parts Retailers: Stores like AutoZone and Advance Auto Parts sell xenon headlight control modules online and in-store, often offering both OEM and aftermarket options. Online Marketplaces: Platforms like Amazon and eBay provide a wide selection of xenon ballast and headlight modules, sometimes at discounted prices, but buyers should verify compatibility with their vehicle. Specialized Suppliers: Websites like Xenonled.eu offer modules tailored to specific car models and can provide guidance for installation or programming if needed.

Additional Considerations

Installation: Some xenon modules require professional installation or programming to ensure proper headlight function. Compatibility: Always check the module code or vehicle model to ensure the module fits your headlights correctly. Warranty and Quality: OEM modules generally offer higher reliability, while aftermarket modules may vary in quality and longevity.

By considering these factors, you can select a xenon headlight fill light module that fits your vehicle and budget while ensuring proper functionality.
