Key Takeaways

The average export price for cable trays from North Korea is approximately $206 per unit, with fireproof variants likely commanding a premium due to material and safety specifications.

Pricing Overview

According to recent trade data, North Korean cable trays have an average export price of $206. 24 per unit, based on US Customs Department records. While this figure represents general cable trays, fireproof cable trays, which are made from fire-resistant materials such as FRP or coated metals, typically cost more due to enhanced safety and compliance requirements.

Market Context

The global fireproof cable tray market is growing steadily, with a market size of USD 2. 31 billion in 2024 and projected growth at a CAGR of 7. 2% through 2033.

This growth is driven by stringent fire safety regulations, industrialization, and infrastructure development. Fireproof trays are especially in demand in power distribution, oil & gas, transportation, and commercial construction, which suggests that North Korean suppliers targeting industrial or export markets may price these products higher than standard trays.

Supplier Options in North Korea

Local suppliers, such as those listed on North Korean trade directories, offer a range of cable trays with customization options to meet client specifications. While exact fireproof tray prices are not publicly listed, suppliers emphasize quality, durability, and compliance with safety standards, which are key factors influencing cost. Enquiries can be made directly via email or phone to obtain quotes tailored to specific fireproof requirements.

Practical Considerations

Material and Type: Ladder-type trays are preferred for industrial applications due to load-bearing capacity and heat dissipation, while perforated or solid-bottom trays may be used in commercial settings. Customization: North Korean suppliers often provide customized solutions, which can affect pricing. Bulk Orders: Export prices may vary depending on order volume, shipping, and international trade restrictions.

In summary, while the baseline export price is around $206 per unit, fireproof cable trays in North Korea are likely to be priced higher depending on material, type, and customization. Direct supplier contact is recommended for precise quotations and availability.
