Supported Cable Tray Systems

Supported cable trays include hanging clamps, hanging bars, and threaded rod suspensions. These systems allow trays to support heavy cable loads (up to 280 lbs per foot with proper spacing) and provide excellent ventilation and accessibility. Prices for support components depend on the type: zinc-plated hanging bars and clamps are common for corrosion resistance, while stainless steel options are more expensive but offer long-term durability.

Factors Affecting Price

Material: Stainless steel and hot-dip galvanized steel are more expensive than aluminum or PVC. Tray Type: Ladder trays, wire mesh trays, and basket trays differ in cost due to design complexity and load capacity. Size and Length: Wider or longer trays increase material costs.

Support System: The type and spacing of supports (hanging rods, clamps, brackets) affect total installation cost. Purchase Volume: Bulk B2B orders significantly reduce per-unit cost compared to retail B2C purchases. SummaryConsumer-grade trays: $15–$34 per unit, lightweight, easy installation.

Industrial/commercial trays: $0. 80–$76+ per unit, depending on material, size, and support system. Support systems: Additional cost for hanging bars, clamps, and threaded rods; zinc-plated or stainless steel options are common for durability.

Choosing the right supported cable tray system depends on load requirements, environment, and installation scale, with bulk industrial purchases offering the best cost efficiency for large projects.
